THE GRAND ARMY.

The Great Parade Something of a Disappointment

BY REASON OF SOME MISMANAGEMENT

Characteristics of the Various Divisions

The Ex-President's Residence the Mecca of the Battle-Scarred Veterans—The Woman's Relief Corps.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Sept. 5.—"Very much of a fiasco" is the candid style in which Grand Marshal Gen. J. B. Carruthers referred this evening to the twenty-seventh national parade of the veterans of the war. A hundred and fifty thousand worn out, disappointed spectators, for the great majority of whom the parade was the attraction that had served as a magnet to draw them to the city agreed with the whooping general of the unformed ranks of Knights of Pythias has acquired a national reputation for his ability in handling large bodies of men. What might have been a creditable, compact procession that could have reached and passed the reviewing stand in a couple of hours, was so drawn out that posts which started immediately after breakfast for the point from which they were to fall into line were still on the march when the dining-rooms of the hotels were opened for dinner. The condition of affairs made the comrades themselves solely responsible.

From the advance reports that had been sent into the grand marshal from all over the country, it was calculated that a minimum of 50,000 veterans would appear in line. As a matter of fact, 20,000 would be a liberal estimate of the number of men that passed the reviewing stand. Departments that promised to send 1,000 men turned up 200, and one department that was listed upon the rolls of 4,000, had by actual count a trifle over 500.

It was a busy day for the Red Cross ambulance corps. Between thirty and forty persons were taken ill on the streets and sent to the hospitals. The majority of the cases were diagnosed as cholera-morbus. There were cases of heat exhaustion and quite a number of neuralgic of the stomach.

During the early morning ex-President Harrison's house was the object of a popular convention touching pensions in as far as possible.

The Hoosier veterans were held in a few blocks further on, however, the spectators, instead of the lines and masses of the crowd, were scattered among the buildings, and the sentiment was repeated that the march was a failure.

The members of the various delegations had been abandoned, broke down the wire cables that were stretched along the sidewalk and took possession of the buildings, and considered as a means of reaching their hosts without running a blockade.

As a result, when the belated division appeared it was compelled to halt from block to block while the police and special officers cleared a pathway.

Many of the feeble comrades, tiring of this experience, dropped out of line, and divisions that started out in goodly form were but a band of stragglers by the time that the dispersing point was reached.

Seen from the reviewing stand the march was replaced with interesting features. The Illinois division led a long carriage occupied by four crippled veterans who were among the earliest founders of the order. They were W. F. Bengal, of Kankakee; W. J. Rutledge, of Jacksonville, who was prominent with Dr. Steven son in forming the Grand Army; Gen. A. C. Sweler, of Bloomington, and W. H. Jenkins of Springfield.

On the back of the driver sat the color-bearer of the state-scripined flag. After him followed the staff of the Illinois standard which floated gloriously in the van of the advancing column. Drawn by six big bays, the naval fleet of Illinois came next in the procession. It was the mimic Monitor. Old sailors were grouped about the iron-clad, Jack Tar who were entirely welcome, however, in the parade of the veteran land force. A bright blue banner with the plature of Farragut, was hoisted over the turret. It was inscribed with the famous saying of the old admiral, "Damn the torpedoes! Go ahead."

Two tiny cannon projected from the "Mike-behind" Monitor and greeted the crowds as they cheered at its approach.

The stuffed body of the War Eagle, "Old Abe," which served the Eighth Wisconsin regiment in place of a dog, was borne aloft at the head of the Badger state division. A veteran at the other end of the platoon carried a stuffed badger, the insignia of the citizens committee.

The delegates to the convention of the Woman's Relief Corps, which opened, were tendered a public reception at Tonawanda hall to-night.

Ex-Secretary Noble delivered an address of welcome, enlivening the women and their work.

Death of John S. Dwight

BOSTON, Sept. 6.—John S. Dwight, the veteran musical critic, formerly editor and owner of the "Night's Journal of Music," one of the most earnest promoters of musical culture in Americans, died yesterday, aged 70.

The Fortyeth post, of Cincinnati, was followed by a huge copper casket borne by four veterans.

The W. T. Sherman guards, of Collumbus, had bearing arms, and were followed by the Mary A. Logan sodality, who carried imitation muskets.

They wheeled around the corners like old veterans.

The New York department was well represented, and the spectators cheered the battle-flag of the Thirteenth regiment, yellow with age and hanging in shreds and tatters from its staff.

Rhode Island's veterans, dressed

white, dandied pants and blue jackets,

were there. From Vermont had their heads decorated with sprigs of cedar,

the emblem of the state.

Soldiers of a Cotton Broker.

NEW YORK, Sept. 6.—Yesterday morning Benjamin Gambrill, a cotton broker of 18 Broadway, committed suicide by shooting himself in the head.

Rhode Island's veterans, dressed

white, dandied pants and blue jackets,

were there. From Vermont had their heads decorated with sprigs of cedar,

the emblem of the state.

Death of the Oldest Woman in Canada.

MONTREAL, Can., Sept. 6.—Mrs.

Elizabeth McNair, a widow 40 years old, and an inmate of the Woman's Christian Association home, was burned to death Monday evening by her dress catching fire from an alcohol lamp, on which she was heating curling tongue.

For some time past provers have been making life miserable for the residents in block 1100 North Union street and the people have armed themselves and intend to catch the person. However, last night Misses Carlotta and Helen Adams, residing at 1109 North Union, were all alone during the evening, their father, D. M. Adams, being detained over night at his farm near Orleans. This fact alone caused the young ladies to become slightly nervous, and every noise startled them. About ten o'clock a neighbor with his little boy was going home on that side of the street and the boy, who is not 10 years of age, ran ahead, but stopped in front of the Adams residence and his folks to catch up. This so startled Miss Carlotta that she raised the window and fired two shots in the air. This startled the residents of the neighborhood, who at once ran to the house to learn the cause of the shots. They found Miss Adams in a highly excited state of mind. She stated that she had shot a man, and could hardly be reconciled to believe anything else. However, when the boy who produced the shot was convinced, the neighbors returned home in peace and quietude.

It had been the privilege of Bishop Hollot to carry the Bible with him in the land of its birth. As some length, always full of interest, he spoke of the original manuscripts written in the days of the prophets. He was not content until he found that the ancient city of Troy was a reality. Man may believe it a time, but not always. He must and will have done his best to prove it.
